Detailed biography.

Trained as an attorney, Alexandro Rovirosa entered the oil and gas industry in 2002 as a strategic advisor – a moment that predates Mexico's 2013 energy reform by more than a decade, giving him visibility on the regulatory, operational and commercial transformations of the sector across multiple cycles.

In Mexico, he founded Rovirosa & Asociados, a law firm focused on the energy sector. Through the firm, he has advised on regulatory matters before the National Hydrocarbons Commission (CNH), CRE, SENER and PEMEX, on contract structuring with operators and service companies, on cross-border M&A, and on due diligence for upstream and midstream investments.

In the United States, he founded Roma Energy, a Texas-based E&P company. Roma Energy participated in two competitive bid rounds operated by Mexico's CNH: the Paraíso block under Round 1.3 (shallow-water exploration) and the VC01 block under Round 2.3 (onshore conventional). These participations placed Alexandro inside the operational, financial and partnership dynamics of Mexico's oil and gas reform from the perspective of an investor and operator, not only as a legal advisor.

Building on these complementary perspectives – legal, regulatory, operational and investor – he founded The Rovirosa Group as an integrated strategic advisory-led platform. The firm serves four primary client segments: private E&P operators, private oil & gas service companies, construction companies, and commercial/industrial real estate developers, with cross-border capability between Mexico and the United States.

Alexandro is an author for specialized oil and gas publications and a regular speaker at OTC (Offshore Technology Conference), CERAWEEK and the Oil & Gas Summit, with focus on Mexico's energy sector, regulatory dynamics and cross-border project structuring.
